Rich Ken of Ancient and Modern Times.

The audient historiaus cave a great deal to say about the wealth of various old Greeks and Romans; but none of them was so rich in all probability, says a New York paper. as are many living Americans. Coe-us, King of Lydia, 500 years before the Christian era, bad so much gold, with other property, that "rich as Cice us" has been for ages a throadbare simile. He was the great plu oora: of antiquity. and it is difficult to judge of the value of his possessions; but it is not at all likely that it ever r : ched more than $10 000 000 to $12,000 000 of our meney. There are, no doubt, forty New Yerkers at least worth more than he, and some x or seven have fourfed his wealth. The richest Roman in Julius Court's time, and one of the triumvirate, was Maicus Licipius Oraseus, an astute speculator noted for avaries. His fortuce has often ben estimated and never above $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 in United States currency. An Atheniau or Roman who could count his estate at what would be one million of our doilars was considered immensely wealthy, but residents of Manbattan who have no more than $1 000 000 are not now considered partieu. larly well off, and are unknown among the opuent members of the community. Mere milionsires are so common here as to merit little distinction figurerally. There were no such estaces in accient times as those of such private fortunes as are held not only here but in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, San Francisco and other civies of the Republic. The growth of wealth has been prodigious in this country within this generation. Some of the largest accu nulations in the land have been made within forty or fifty years. Half a century ago only one man in the metropolis was worth $1,000 000, and his name was John Jacob Astor. - Now hundreds of our fellow-citizens can go beyond those figures and they feel rather noor than otherwise. When Stephen Girard died in 1831 he was orneidered the richest man on this continent-no one approsched or began to approach him monetarily-and yet his property was not valued at over $9,000.000. Men who do not regard themselves as very old one easily reconniber when $100,000 was thought to be a formos even in our largest cities, and when $10 000 in the small tow: 8 was deemed so independence. At pre sent $100,000 is hardly rickoned softwent to make a man comfortable, and $10,000 would not be deserving of in motion, unless to a rural vilige of New England, where general poverty lends a magnifying power to any eye that contemplates any kind of onia. Within the next fifty years it is likely that private fortuges will be incressed bayond what they have been to the same period in the past. In 1930 and 1940 it is probable enough we shall hear of plain American citizens who are worth $100. 000,000 to $150 000,000, and who will be grumbling that they have no more, Was Joan of Arc Burnt at the Stake?

The Mayor of Complegne is quite a genius in his way. He knew that the prevailing notion was to secularize everything, and consequently he invented a republican manifestation in honor of Joso of Arc, the Maid of Orleans, who defended Compaigne against the English and Barguedians in 1430, and was betraved into the hands of John of Luxembourg, who surrendered her to the Eoglishmen who buint her at the stake in the market place of Roues. The ruins of the Maiden's Tow r show where the Picardy archer pulled the unfortunate Joan from ber war horse, and when those who are fond of going back to the history of other days thick of the legend, and then of that horrible statue of the Maid of Orleans at the end of the Rue des Pyramides in Paris, they mus: deplo e the fact that the man of Picardy lets no descendant who would volunteer to come forwird and unhorse the figure which surm ants the pedestal. M. Casrles Monselet has thrown some doubt on the legend of Joan of A c having been burnt by the English. He quotes a paragraph from the Mercury of 1683 announcing that certain d: caments recently discovered ted to the con-clusion that Joan of Are had been married, and that consequently, some unfortunate vic im must have been sacrifieed to her place at Rouen. The documents consisted of an attestation made by Father Vignier, who said "Five years after the judgment of Josn of Arc. on the 20th of May, Joan, the Maid, visited Metz. On the same day her brothers called to see her. They thought she had been burnt, but when they saw her they recognized her at once. They took her with them to Boquelon. Whereon a yeoman named Nicolle gave her a horse, and two other persons entributed a sword and a plumed hat, and the said Maid sprung very cleverly on the said horse, saying a multitude of things to the yeoman Nicolle"

The old priest wrote this history with his own The old priest wrote this history with his own hand, and made oath as to it, sincerity before a public notary, adding as a proof of what he had advanced a copy of the original contract of marriage between "Robert des Armoises and Joan of Arc, otherwise known as the Maid of Orleans." Complegue has treasured up a faith ful souvenir of the herome, and about fifteet weeks ago a subscription was opened to enable years ago a subscription was opened to enable the town to erect a statue to her memory. The idea was started by a rather unpopular person, and was soon allowed to drop. The present Mayor again took up the matter, and with the aid of the municipality has at length succeeded in giving the town a statue of the Maid, whose words "J'irai voir me bons amis de Compiegne," have been cut in the pedescal.
